Customs/immigration

Once you land, your passengers are supposed to stay aboard. One representative of your vessel goes ashore. Most marinas will provide a phone, or at least a payphone with the customs number nearby. 888-226-7277 (888-CAN-PASS) Once you get the conf. number, you're all clear.

Canada makes the customs/immigration issue simple. If you've ever entered Canada on your boat before, you'll typically just need your boating registration numbers and the names of your passengers. As long as there aren't any flags for firearms or excess alcohol/tobacco, you'll have a confirmation number in minutes. If you've never called in before, they may ask for the description of your vessel, registration numbers, names, citizenship, DOB of your passengers etc. It's no big deal.

The best part about Pelee Island is going to the winery. Do the tour/wine tasting in the afternoon. Then purchase a bottle or two of your favorites, head over to the 'deli hut' (on their property) and buy a couple of steaks, chops, burgers, sausage or chicken, some cheese and freshly baked bread. Enjoy the wine and cheese while barbecuing on the provided BBQs and then enjoy a nice dinner. The winery will usually provide transportation to and from Scudder's.

Put-in-Bay

Returning to the U.S. Customs/immigration

(Our customs/immigration don't keep a database, don't communicate with each other and do nothing to facilitate reporting, so you will need the boat registration number and names of all on board available and a list of items purchased in Canada. You will be given a clearance number, which should be recorded in your ship's log. Everyone on board without an I-68 will need to use the videophone located at the Dockmaster's building at Put-in-Bay (in the park by the bathhouse.)

Put-in-Bay's downtown public marina has three large docks. The Village of Put-in-Bay leases dock space on A and C docks. DeRivera Park, where the village's bathhouse is located, leases docking space on B Dock. The DeRivera Park Trust uses the revenue from B Dock for the maintenance of the park area downtown.

All three public marina docks have mandatory rafting rules and watercraft may be required to raft off up to four vessels abreast.
